Saturday Morning.....Dec. 19, 1857.

Important from Kansas.

We have, this morning, an interesting and important letter from Kansas, in which the energy and determination of the Kansas people and his advisers may well think twice, before attempting to saddle that Lecompton Constitution upon that body of brave men who have assembled to protect the Legislature of their choice. They will fight; and there are not in the North who will not pray that they may win a glorious victory.

Resignation of Gov. Walker.

The blood-hounds have been successful. They have worried Gov. Walker into resigning his place. A brief synopsis of the Governor's letter of resignation will be found on the telegraphic head. Gov. Walker has at last sent him to Kansas with the distinct understanding that the Constitution which should go to the people of the Territory for approval or rejection, and upon that understanding his course was shaped. No wonder, then, that he is indignant at the treatment he has received from the President and his bloodhounds, who have been for the last two weeks driving him from place to place, intent upon their prey. This pressed, he had but one alternative left; either to forswear all his previous pledges and acts, or resign. The honorable course he has chosen, and President Buchanan is left to shrink from an incubus which seemed likely to disturb his rest for a season. We think there can be but one opinion among honorable men as to the comparative good faith displayed by the President and the Governor during the discussion of this Kansas matter.

FROM WASHINTON.

[Correspondence of the Chicago Daily Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15, 1857.

The House will locate to morrow in the new hall which has been compared, for splendor to Aladdin's cavern, with Taylor's ice cream saloon in New York, and the famous London gin palaces, or the saloon has the right to complain, I will not decide. The hall is 139 feet long, 93 feet wide, and 60 feet high. Its cubic area is 464,000 feet somewhat smaller than the old hall and is originally plain and almost meagre of decoration, except in one respect, it is covered over by gilding and florid painting. The gallaries will seat several thousand persons, the floor will seat 400 members with comfort, allowing each a desk and heavy chair. The Speaker's chair stands upon a rostrum about four feet above the level of the floor; the clerk's desk one foot lower. The Speaker's and the clerk's desks are of beautiful Italian marble, inlaid with the clouded marble of Tennessee, the most beautiful in the United States.

The distinguishing feature of the hall is the dome which is an iron frame work, divided into compartments filled with ground glass, and supported by light framed of light iron pillars and very thick plates of glass. All the light of the hall is admitted through this roof or ceiling. It falls equally on the desks and seats, and is pleasant to the eyes of the members. Spectators, looking down, but over the gallery and near the sides and corners, the light is reduced so as to render that portion of the room gloomy and obscure. The ceiling is very gorgeously and elaborately gilded, painted and fretted. The glass is painted in the style of the old cathedrals. Foliage, acorns, and oak leaves, depend from the roof in all the glory of gilt leaf, and the variety of green, yellow and crimson colors.

The House has no direct access to the fresh air of heaven. It is in the middle of the vast pile, and is surrounded on every side by long corridors, passages and committee rooms. It is ventilated by vast pipes which pour in 11,000 cubic feet of air per minute. This is the wholesome or not experience can determine. Correspondents of the press will be refused admission to the floor to the gallery. The officers will have seats on the floor, before the Speaker, as now. The privileged lobbymen, ex-members, ex-senators, governors, and the other loafers who like to hang and sell on commission, will circulate freely as before. Some of these are making an outcry about this. I think it will be good and that it will purify the purity of the corps.

The Speaker's room on the south side of the hall is separated from the hall by a wide passage, and is a magnificent apartment. The ceiling is very gorgeous, and seems to be in keeping with the size and appointments of the room.

The House will begin well, by peremptorily banishing all spirits from the House wing of the Capitol. No drinking can be done at a less distance than the grocery at the corner. It has been heard of Walker since his arrival, that it is currently reported that he is preparing to "whip the President, by writing a book" as he has already done. That would be very much like his running away from Kansas to write about it. In action among the Kanzans might have been sublime, here he is ridiculous. The people will have no time to read it. It is very hard to get the public attention.

Buchanan has been seized by a party of Southern fire eaters, and is politically in their hands. He sank his individuality in assuming the platform and now ignores his official responsibility by surrendering to the cabinet. He has done this—that cranky incendiary who has got Buchanan in his hands. The Pennsylvania tool of the President says, three days, have last week, named the Cabinet. He was a pro-slavery editor at Lancaster, and the mouth piece of the Conspiracy. He took up this Jack Henderson, and Buchanan's connivance sent back to Kansas with orders to use the troops in forcing the Lecompton conspiracy. If he is true, there will be some fun for him, too, it ought to cost Democratic Douglas is fighting away with all parties doubtful. The Democrats maintain a dignified silence, waiting to see what old Buck intends to do for their votes. That foxy old fellow is a prudent fox as he is, holds the grapes ripe and very tempting, and is saying all the time with that benevolent face of his, "there they are gentlemen, help yourselves"—there stands the old fox with the grapes in his hands, and the young fellows looking. Behind the young fellows, cutlasses in hand, ready to cut down ones the moment the grapes fall into their paws, for the farmer will be sure to pay for that will steal grapes will be sure to pay for that will steal grapes will be sure to pay for that will steal grapes

The Recent Session of Congress—Our Position.

There is an immense amount of business already ready and ripe for action before Congress, which can be attended to during the present session, and which ought to be disposed of before the close of the year. Besides the ordinary appropriation bills, which must be passed, there are numerous measures of general importance which have been delayed by the hasty and crowded legislation of the last few days of the session, which ought to be carefully considered and matured before they are finally acted upon. Among these are the Pacific Railroad bill, the Homestead bill, the Tariff bill, the Land bill, the Mail bill, the Indian Appropriation bill, the Consular and Diplomatic bill, and the Deficiency bill. Besides these, there are numerous private claims, which have been delayed from session to session, and which ought to be disposed of at this session. Many of these bills have been carefully matured, and are ready for action. Others require careful examination and revision. Many of them are of great importance to the parties interested, and to the country. Some of them involve the honor of the nation, and the faithful performance of treaty stipulations. All of them require careful consideration, and cannot be safely disposed of in the hurry and confusion of the last few days of the session.

We are in possession of news from Kansas to the 15th instant. In the counties along the Missouri river, slightly have been made to elect pro-slavery delegates to the Convention, but in the Territory at large the Free State men have a majority of from 3,000 to 4,000 votes. The Free State men will not vote for delegates to the Convention, but will vote for State officers, and for members of the Legislature. The Convention will then meet, and will probably take steps for the admission of Kansas into the Union as a State. The Free State men will then have a majority in the Legislature, and will elect Senators and Representatives to Congress, who will be admitted to their seats. Kansas will then be a Free State.

The Indianapolis Locomotive Works have been burned down. Loss $150,000. Insured for $50,000.

The Administration and the Price of the Public Lands.

The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, who is generally well informed upon matters connected with the Administration, says:

"The Administration is determined to carry through the measure for the graduation of the price of the public lands, which was defeated in the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress. The Senate bill, which passed that body at the last session, will be introduced into the House at the present session, and will be pressed to a vote. The Administration is determined to carry this measure through, and will use all the influence at its command to secure its passage. The Administration is pledged to the measure, and will not consent to any modification of the bill which will defeat the object in view. The Administration will not consent to the passage of any bill which will not graduate the price of the public lands, and reduce the price of the refuse lands to twelve and a half cents per acre. The Administration will not consent to the passage of any bill which will not grant pre-emption rights to actual settlers. The Administration will not consent to the passage of any bill which will not grant to each State in which the public lands are situated five per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands within its limits, for the purpose of making internal improvements within the State. The Administration will not consent to the passage of any bill which will not grant to each State in which the public lands are situated the right of taxing the lands sold by the United States, from the date of the sale, the same as the lands of individuals are taxed
